TRADING THE FINAL SILVER BULL MARKET MAJOR WAVE FIVE BREAKOUT

The final Major Wave Five breakout above the previous high of $6.445 in the 1970's silver bull market was almost impossible to trade. The reason it was virtually impossible to trade is the fact that once the breakout occurred the price of silver went straight up without much of a tradeable pause. If you sold because you expected a trading pause you had to buy back in at a higher price or you missed the huge rise in the final silver bull market Major Wave Five. The lesson learned from the 1970's silver bull market final Major Wave Five is don't trade a final Major Wave Five in a silver bull market. Will it be wise not to trade the current final Major Wave Five silver bull market breakout? Please notice the double bottom that followed the Major Wave Four low.

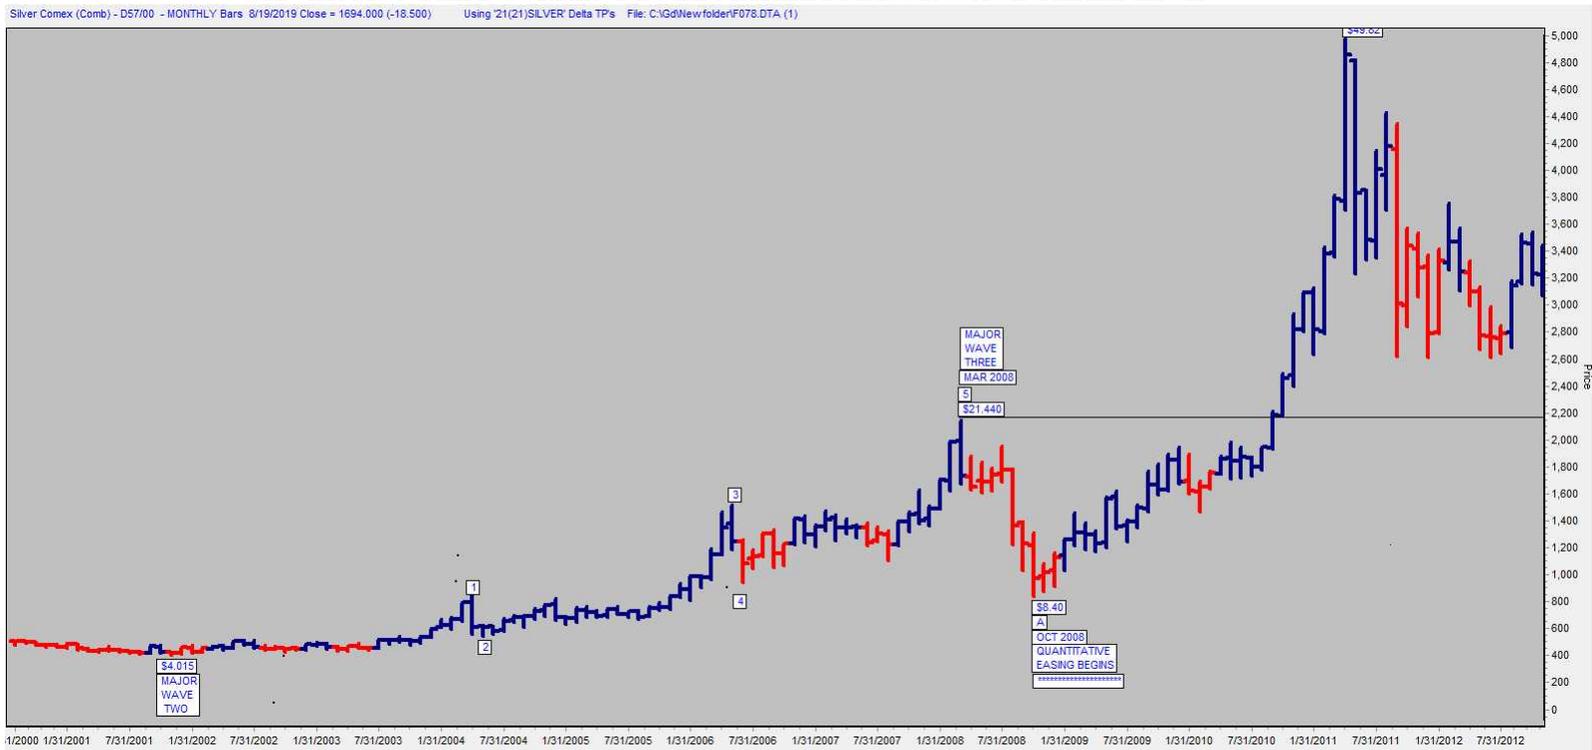

SILVER MONTHLY 1979

SILVER MONTHLY CURRENT BULL MARKET MAJOR WAVES # 1 AND # 2

SILVER MONTHLY CURRENT BULL MARKET MAJOR WAVE THREE HIGH

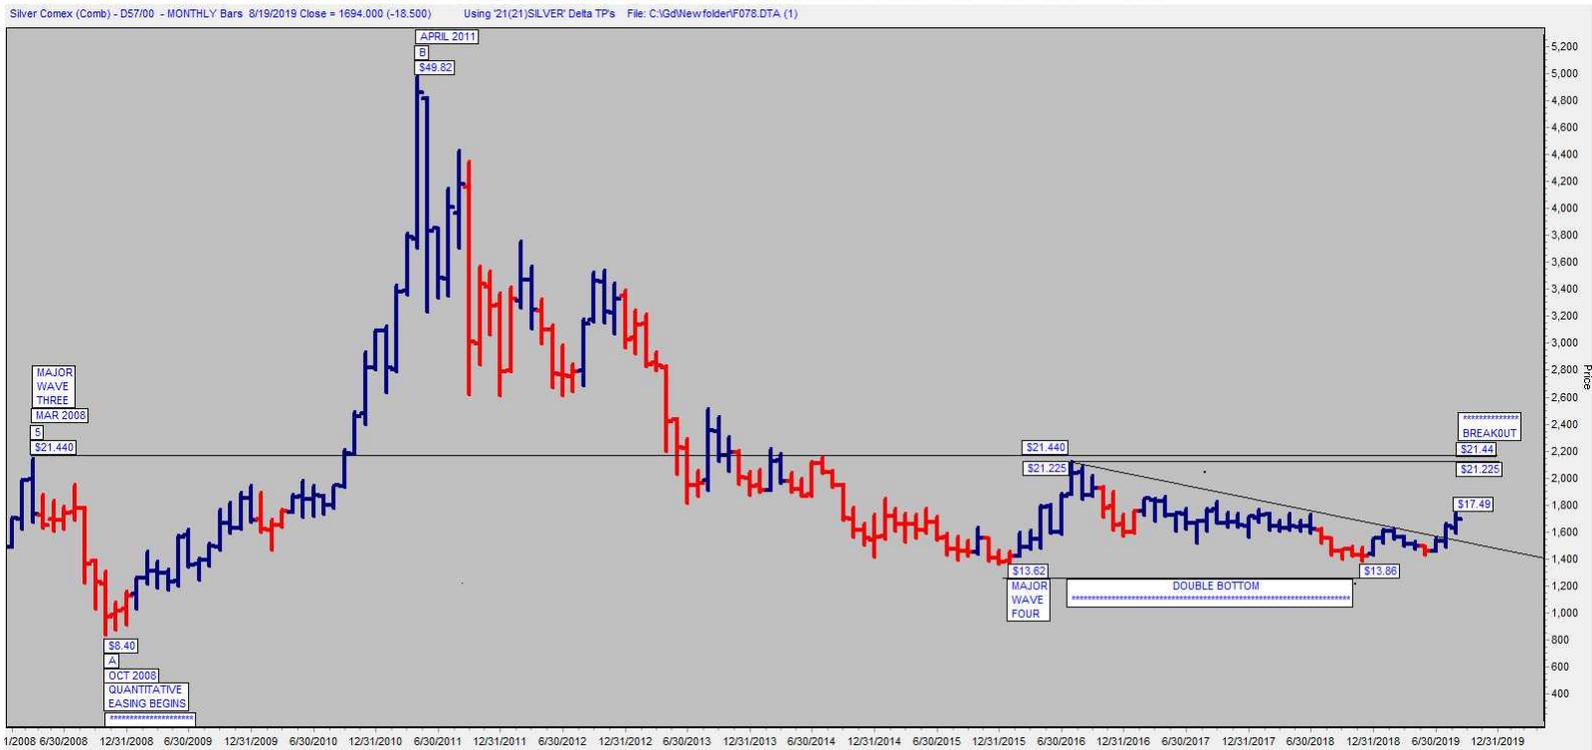

The current Major Wave Four is a Running Flat Correction that bottomed at $13.62. This silver bull market Major Wave Four low was followed by a double bottom just like the 1970's silver bull market Major Wave Four low shown on page 1. An important difference between the last silver bull market and the current silver bull market is that the break out over the Major Wave Three high in the current bull market takes place at the high of $21.44 and not the Running Flat B leg high of $49.82. It is my guess that since the breakout over the Major Wave Three high in the 1970's silver bull market led to a monster non-tradeable bull move, the current breakout over the Major Wave Three high of $21.44 will also lead to a monster non-tradeable bull move. This may mean that those who wait for a breakout over the Running Flat Correction leg B high of $49.82 will be left at the starting gate. My opinion is do not trade silver bullion or silver stocks from here on out. Hang on for "The potential ride of your life."
